CRAFTY WOOD

Treen for the Table

Christie's South Kensington

Wednesday, 8 November 2006 at 10.30am

A collection of four English lignum vitae coffee grinders
17th century (estimates range £1,000-4,000)

South Kensington – A magnificent and comprehensive collection of treen, domestic objects turned and hewn from wood, gathered by the late Jonathan Levi will be offered in a fascinating single owner sale, Treen for the Table, on Wednesday, 8 November 2006 at Christie's South Kensington. With estimates ranging from £200 upwards, this extraordinary collection of over 200 lots is estimated to fetch in excess of £200,000.

The term treen literally means made of tree. It is possibly also derived from the old English term for being turned on a lathe which is tyrn. The exquisite Levi treen collection includes English and European examples, dating from medieval to the early 19th century, with the majority relating to eating and drinking, each with a glorious rich patina. It also includes the best collection of drinking vessels ever to come to the market.

This superb collection was built up over a ten year period by Jonathan Levi, a widely respected gastroenterologist. His initial fascination with trees and woodlands led to his discovery and enthusiasm for these antique wooden objects. Together with his wife Mary, he would regularly trawl every market, auction, antiques fair and shop looking for interesting objects. Levi was a discerning and discriminating collector, with an eye for unusual and interesting styles, rare forms and early examples. In 1998, he published a book on the subject, Treen for the Table, which is now accepted and frequently quoted as a standard reference work.

Treen objects are seen by many as the true 'folk art' heritage of the British Isles, conveying ingenious versatility and charming naïve craftsmanship. The examples offered are now extremely rare survivors, and as such are very highly prized by collectors. In the drinking section are early goblets including an English fruitwood goblet, circa 1620 (estimate: £4,000-6,000) and a pair of English decorated pear-wood goblets, late 18th or early 19th century (estimate: £6,000-10,000) together with a superbly detailed English engine-turned 'York' tankard, circa 1650 (estimate: £7,000-10,000), in addition to punch ladles, wassail bowls, Scottish quaiches, and Irish lamhogs.

Occasionally items were whittled as tokens of love as can be seen in the example of a large Welsh apple wood love spoon, circa 1830 (estimate: £3,000-5,000). Further examples in the collection include a Scottish cedar wood and silver mounted quaich, 1707 (estimate: £4,000-6,000), a collection of three English treen mufineers, late 17th century (estimates range from £2,000-4,000) and a collection of four English lignum vitae coffee grinders, 17th century (estimates range from £1,000-4,000).
