CHRISTIE'S

CHRISTIE'S PRESENTS EARLY HIGHLIGHTS FROM The London Sale

A Summer Exhibition and September Auction at Christie's South Kensington in Celebration of All Things British

An original double-decker Routemaster bus, London, 1966 (estimate: £20,000-30,000)

South Kensington – Christie's is proud to announce early highlights from the one-off themed exhibition and auction The London Sale. The special extended exhibition, which will run for six-weeks throughout the Olympic Summer from 27 July through to the auction on 3 September 2012, is sure to prove popular with visitors to the buzzing cultural hub of South Kensington. The auction will comprise over 150 lots in total, presenting a broad variety of items synonymous with London and offering an exciting opportunity for lovers of London to acquire iconic pieces of the city's imagery and history from paintings and topographical views, through to memorabilia, fashion, and even an original double-decker Routemaster Bus which dates back to another iconic year in British history – 1966 (estimate: £20,000-30,000) illustrated above. Items will range from just £500 with important paintings expected to fetch up to £200,000.

Nick Martineau, Director and Head of Sale commented: “Christie’s is delighted to stage an extended public exhibition for ‘The London Sale’ – a special auction that will celebrate art and icons of the capital, and which will be on public view throughout the Olympic period (July-September) at our South Kensington saleroom on Old Brompton Road. We hope that London residents and tourists alike will enjoy visiting the exhibition and learning a little more about London’s rich history through the objects and works of art on offer. These are just a few highlights which will be sold at auction on 3 September, but the sale continues to grow – the deadline for consignments is 30 April. With estimates starting at only £500, the sale will provide a wonderful opportunity for lovers of London to bid on everything from an original 1966 Routemaster bus through to beautiful 19th century views across the River Thames.”

MEMORABILIA

A bronze model of a Grenadier Guard
After George Edward Wade, late 19th century

17 ¼ in. (43.8 cm.) high

Estimate: £1,500-2,500

A plaster maquette of the famous, 'Guy the gorilla' who was a much-loved resident of London Zoo from 1947 through to 1978.

Named after Guy Fawkes (due to his arrival at the Zoo on 5 November) he became a TV celebrity during the 1960s and 70s and a near life-size bronze statue of him, created in his memory by William Timym, continues to be an attraction at the Zoo today.

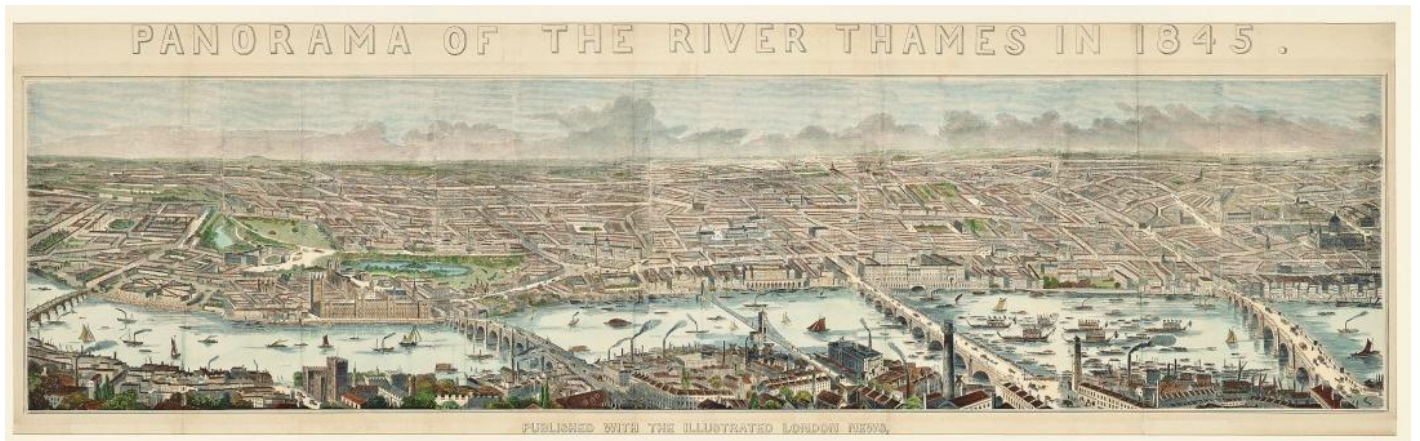

Estimate: £1,800-2,500

An original pub sign from 'The London Inn', circa 1965
acrylic on board, painted wood frame, 80 x 120 cm
The pub name 'London Inn' dates back to the stagecoach era when it was common practice for an inn to indicate the destination of the coach which called there – London was obviously a common destination, particularly in South West counties. The signs were often illustrated by instantly recognisable London landmarks or scenes so that those who could not read could still identify the inn.

Estimate: £500-800

TOPOGRAPHICAL VIEWS

Panorama of the River Thames in 1845
Estimate: £1,500-2,000

This picture is thought to represent one of the many proposals that the City Corporation considered for a new Thames crossing in 1876. Over 50 schemes were submitted, with the proposal for a bridge – which ultimately resulted in the present Tower Bridge – finally winning.

A proposal for a Thames tunnel, circa 1876
A.M. Brown, after a design by J Standfield M.I.C.E., 19th century oil on canvas
Estimate: £2,000-4,000

W. Hollar
The Prospect of London and Westminster Taken from Lambeth
Estimate: £1,500-2,000
